Fontos tudnivalók

- Az utasításokat pontosan kell követni. Csak az utasításban megadott helyre beírt megoldás fogadható el.
- Mindig csak egy megoldást szabad beírni.
- A betűjelek legyenek jól olvashatóak, az esetleges javítások pedig egyértelműek.
- A megadott szószámot nem szabad túllépni. Az összevont alakok egy szónak számítanak (pl. "it's" egy szó, "it is" két szó).

Task 1

- Read this text about horses in London and then read the statements (1-8) that follow.
- Your task is to decide whether the statements are true or not according to the text.
- Mark a sentence A if it is true according to the article.
- Mark it B if it is false.
- Mark it C if there is not enough information in the text to decide if it is true or not.
- Write the letters in the white boxes next to the numbers as in the example.

THE LOST HORSES OF LONDON

The city of the horse and carriage is gone. But some traces remain...

The days when horses and humans lived cheek by jowl in the capital are unarguably over. Horses pulling heavy loads have disappeared, and most people would argue that the black cab does a far better job than the hansom cab* ever did. But statues of kings atop their horses take pride of place in squares and parks, and the more recent Animals in War memorial on Park Lane is a reminder that our dependence on horses lasted until less than a century ago.

Not all of the reminders are visual, either. Streets called mews used to have rows of stables in them, and in central London mews houses, i.e. converted stables, sell for several million pounds each today. Not all London mews have changed, though. Bathurst Mews is one of the last to still house horses; it is home to Hyde Park Stables. The prices for riding lessons are fairly steep, but just think: as everyone else walks gloomily along Oxford Street, you could be trotting purposefully around the park. The pace might be a bit leisurely for the experienced rider, but in terms of location, you simply can't beat it.

If, on the other hand, you're keen to ride through rolling hills, then Richmond Park is just the place. Stag Lodge Stables, for example, are based just off the A3, and as well as offering lessons, in summer they also offer pub rides. A pony and a pint? Sounds like heaven!

If you're a polo enthusiast, London offers a quick fix for that as well; Ham Polo Club is just a short journey from the centre of town, while Windsor (a 40-minute drive from London) offers some of the best polo in the UK. So you see, London might not be the most obvious place for horse-lovers to hang out, but if you look in the right places, the horses certainly do exist.

TALK LESS, LISTEN MORE TO BE THE FRIEND OF A PERSON WITH DEPRESSION

Clinical depression is a disease and it often requires professional help. But loved ones are the first, and often a last, line of defense.

What is the best way to help someone who is feeling low, struggling emotionally, or perhaps even clinically depressed? This question occured to me recently, when I was scuba diving with friends and noticed that one of them was in unusually low spirits. In a quiet moment between dives, I asked him how he was. He replied, "Not well at all." He said he'd been feeling depressed and isolated. I'm embarrassed to say I drew a blank about what to say next. I asked a few more questions and listened, but failed to offer any genuine comfort.

Depression is intensely painful, confusing and frightening, experts say, both to the depressed person and to those around that person. Some people avoid the depressed person because they don't know what to do. Most of us try to help – and yet we often make the person feel misunderstood, even judged. We minimize the problem ("You have so much to be thankful for"). We offer platitudes ("Time heals all wounds") or advice ("You'll feel better if you exercise").

Emotional support from friends and family can be an essential element in the healing process, but it isn't easy to know what to say. Don't wait for your friend to reach out to you. Start by asking the person how they are doing. Listen to what they have to say. A depressed person wants most of all to be heard, respected and gently loved, and they want to be reassured that the friend isn't going to leave. Offer to talk, but don't pressure. Think of yourself as a 'distraction' – someone to have fun with. Be gently hopeful without claiming that everything is going to be better overnight. Avoid saying things that minimise their pain. That includes: "Stop feeling sorry for yourself." "There are people worse off," or "You need a hobby." These are all proven losers that the depressed person will see as blaming or hostile.

Simple, clear messages work best. Say, "I'm sorry that you're in so much pain, and I want you to know that I am here for you for as long as it takes." This can go a long way toward helping your friend feel less isolated.

As for my dive buddy, the day after our conversation I wrote him a note to say I was sorry he'd hit a rough patch and that I was a 'good ear'. I also offered to go diving with him.
His response? "Thanks, Elizabeth. That's really cool."

Task 3

- Write the words on the lines. An example (0) has been given for you.

TWO OF THE TOP WINNERS OF THIS YEAR'S IG NOBEL PRIZES

The spoof awards that have become almost as famous as the real Nobels were handed out at their annual ceremony at Harvard University, US. One of the prizes went to a Japanese team, who measured the friction of banana skin in the lab, and showed why apple and orange peel are not quite so hazardous.

The Kitasato University group received the physics Ig for their insights. Ridiculous as this may seem, when you delve deeper, you will see a serious intention. The Japanese scientists are interested in how friction and lubrication affect the movement of our limbs. They have found that the molecular gels that give banana skins their slippery properties are also there in our bodies, for example, knees, where our bones meet.

Another winner this year was the study that examined the brains of people who see the face of Jesus and other figures on slices of toast. Kang Lee, from the University of Toronto, Canada, and colleagues showed their subjects pictures of "noise" - the random marks you see on a piece of toast - to see what patterns they would identify. The tendency to see order in randomness - like a face in the charred areas of a piece of bread - is a well-established psychological phenomenon.

Using MRI, Lee and his team saw how the same parts of the brain light up when we see non-existent faces as when we see real ones.

"Interestingly, when you superimpose all the noise images where these people say they see faces, and remove all the noise images in which they told us they couldn't see faces, a face does actually show up," Prof Lee said. The Toronto scientist explained that this type of pattern recognition was hard-wired, and even chimps experienced it.

"The face you are going to see is determined by your personal expectations or beliefs," he added. "So, for example, Buddhists will not see Jesus on toast, but rather Buddha."

CLAUSTROPHILIA: HOW A LIVE-ACTION GAME BECAME BUDAPEST'S TOP TOURIST ACTIVITY

In the Hungarian capital, tourists are lining up to ... escape from a room. We look at a growing trend

Viktor Oszvald got the idea for Budapest's top tourist activity while juggling dressed as a clown. His daughter had just been born and that evening, while working at a horror-themed show in a suburban factory, he dreamt of breaking free and had a brainwave.

Now Oszvald is founder of Claustrophilia, TripAdvisor's* top-ranked thing to do in Budapest, and part of a tourist craze sweeping Europe: room escape games. Essentially live-action puzzles, the games combine riddles and physical tasks, with the aim being to, well, escape from a room.

Teams of up to five usually get an hour to make a successful exit, paying between £13 and £30 depending on the game. Few succeed. Since late 2012 Claustrophilia has been "beaten" by about a dozen teams unaided, of the many hundreds Oswald claims have played. He sometimes takes pity on contenders and shouts out hints via a speaker.

Claustrophilia is one of over 30 escape games to have cropped up in the city since 2011. Some, like the popular TRAP, use imagery from the likes of ancient Egypt and medieval Europe. ParaPark's dank setting could have been lifted straight from Saw − the horror movie said to have partly spurred escape games' popularity. Other influences include TV shows like Survivor, but most claim the format emerged from point-and-click PC games of the early 1990s.

Claustrophilia's backstory is the enigmatic will of an old eccentric to explain the cramped assortment of props and furniture ‑ ranging from gas masks to 19th century maps. It's spooky but never scary, and held in an apartment within a disused building (the precise location is shared only upon booking).

Like the famous ruin pubs, escape games have flourished in Budapest, thanks to the many pretty-but-dilapidated apartment blocks that owe much to a violent, tragic past, wedged between fascism and communism.

Buoyed by their success, many games companies are now branching out, eyeing several destinations in western Europe. Meanwhile, the games' popularity at home continues to soar. Most people come to Budapest for the architecture or the nightlife. But now, many are coming simply to escape.

Welcome to the Listening component of the Matura Examination.

The listening material and the instructions are recorded on the CD, and the tasks and instructions are printed in your test booklet.

- There will be three tasks, and every recording will be played twice.
- The tasks will begin with some music, and then you will hear (and you can also read) the instructions to the task.
- This will be followed by a silent period on the CD in order to give you some time to look at the task in your test booklet before hearing the text.
- Then we will play the recording in one piece.
- After another short silent period we will play the recording for a second time, but now in shorter sections and with breaks between the sections in order to give you enough time to write down your answers.

Please note that the first item in each task (marked with a tick [✓]) is always an example.

The whole test is exactly 30 minutes long.

Good luck!

- In this section you will hear a radio report about what we might be putting on our plates in 20 years' time.
- Your task will be to circle the letter or letters of the correct answer or answers in the boxes on the right. Please note that in this task both answers may be correct. This means that you will have to circle either A or B, or both A and B.
- First, you will have some time to look at the task, and then we will play the whole recording in one piece.
- Then, after a short pause, you will hear the recording again, but this time we will play the text in shorter sections to give you enough time to write down your answers.

TASK 2

- In this section you will hear an interview with Sarah Morgan, an American businesswoman who runs a speed dating service in London.
- Your task will be to decide whether the following statements are true, false or we do not know because the text does not say, and write the appropriate letter in the boxes on the right. Write A if the statement is true, write B if the statement is false, and write C if the text does not say.
- First, you will have some time to look at the task, and then we will play the whole recording in one piece.
- Then, you will hear the recording again, but this time we will play the text in shorter sections to give you enough time to write down your answers.
- A = TRUE B = FALSE C = THE TEXT DOES NOT SAY

✓ Sarah is the manager of a dating agency in the capital of the UK. A

8. Sarah defines speed dating as a system whose main aim is to help people meet a lot of new people.

9. The length of the chats varies depending on the number of participants in the event.

10. After the signal the men have a minute to move on to the next date.

11. If one person likes another person, their email address will be automatically forwarded to the other party.

12. Sarah is the first businessperson to have introduced speed dating to the British market.

13. Such events are sometimes organised for specific groups of people.

14. Speed dating events are better for meeting new people than ordinary bars or discos, because it is obvious why everybody is there.

15. You have to prove that you are single to be allowed to attend a speed dating event.

16. People don't know whether they've been chosen by a particular person until two days after the event.

17. Most people agree that the time limit is enough to decide if a person is a hopeless case.

18. According to the Edinburgh study, the majority of people arrive at a decision in less than 30 seconds.

19. The most important thing about a woman for most men is her face.

20. The most important thing about a man for most women is his height.

That is the end of TASK 2.

Task B

You found the following post on an internet forum called Moral Dilemmas:

Nick 17

There are certain times when you know things have gone from really bad to out of control. The party started out fine, like they always do. And things got a little crazy, like they always do. But my girlfriend, Sarah had way too much alcohol and was sick for an hour, going in and out of consciousness. There were no adults around and we were at somebody's vacation home, miles from the nearest town.

Someone said we should call 911 but one of the girls said that we'd only get ourselves into a lot of trouble. 'My parents mustn't know I'm even here! If they find out, this will be my last time out of the house before I leave for college!' she said, and most people agreed.

I felt more scared than ever before in my life. I had this gut feeling that Sarah could be more ill than any of us could deal with, and if we didn't get help she might even die. But what if I was wrong? What if everything got better in an hour and everyone hated me for making a huge deal out of just a "bad situation" at a party? Eventually I kept quiet and luckily Sarah was ok when she woke up the following morning. She had no idea what had happened and I haven't told her although I'm feeling guilty and I'm sure it was a narrow escape.

What do you think?
